Weak Canadian Defences Menace To U. S. Claim

Expenditures May Be Made Along Divide Against Possibility of Invading Force From Across Ocean

Exclusive to Edmonton Bulletin
TORONTO, Jan. 6. — "Unless Canada takes adequate measures to provide for the defence of both coast lines and particularly of the Pacific, the 4,000 miles of unfortified boundary between the United States and Canada may soon become a thing of the past," says a despatch today from the Toronto Star's correspondent at Ottawa.

CHINESE ENVOY IS RAPPED FOR CRACK AT JAPS

Ottawa Fortification Speech Just Bit Too Dizzy for Diplomats

By THOMAS WATLING
Exclusive to Edmonton Bulletin
OTTAWA, Jan. 6. — The Chinese general's speech in Ottawa last night warning Canada to tend to her defences and taking some heavy shots at Japan has stirred up a spot of diplomatic excitement.

Information reaching Ottawa is to the effect that United States army and navy officials regard the weakness of Canadian defences as a menace to the security of that country. While no effort is made to name Canada into an armed camp, the U. S. officials say the alternative is a strong U. S. defence along the Canadian border in order to prevent any aggressor using Canadian territory as a base of attack upon the U. S.

The United States plans to spend about $100,000,000 in the next year on naval strength and probably more than $400,000,000 on the army and coastal defences. In President Roosevelt's view, the U. S. must face this "drive" for security.

MARGIN OF SAFETY
The United States is expected to provide a reasonable margin of safety against invasion for the rest of the world. Canadian officials point out that the value of the margin of safety is negative if a hostile nation determines to attack by over-running the sparse defences of the Canadian coast.

Intimately for several years there has been demands that the United States should be adequately fortified in coastal regions. Now the United States is being asked to take the responsibility for the defence of Canada.

Some have named the power at Japan and all have perhaps had the same idea in mind. The move toward fortification. Not until recent months, however, has the move been so general.

The dominion however is officially concerned with the matter. Dr. Chong Lok Chen said about Japan, but it definitely is moved about Dr. Chen presenting to the House of Commons a resolution to urge Canada to take steps to strengthen its coastal defences.

HERBY WALLER
Dr. Chong, with a smile that hid his childlike and blind faith that he could home a good healthy fellow where it might do some good, he is new to Ottawa, his predecessor Mr. Chong, who had returned to China not very long ago.

Mr. Chong was a mild, unassuming little man and worked quietly and diplomatically. Dr. Chong believes in talking right out in the open, particularly when the class meets at the foot of Parliament Hill, and where the Canadian government has the lion.

The matter will be discussed in cabinet and decision taken whether Canada should be in a position to continue to be a "paper tiger."

Ice Campers Driven South By Blizzard

Experts Express Fear Flee May Sweep To Open Sea

When 11 Soviet aviators, pioneering a proposed Moscow-San Francisco airline, reached the North Pole, they joined the brief roll of explorer-heroes who have attained that goal. Map shows how Otto Schmidt led the Russian party in the short dash from Rudolph Island after months of preparation. Also shown on the map are routes of others who reached the pole. The late Admiral Robert E. Peary traveled by ship and dog sled. Lincoln Ellsworth and Capt. Roald Amundsen cruised over the pole in the Italian dirigible, Admiral Richard E. Byrd accomplished the feat by plane. Dr. Schmidt's glass called for setting up a permanent air base.

Adventurers May Be Swept Into Open Sea
THOMAS, Norway, Jan. 6. — The Russian Arctic weather campers reported today that a blizzard had driven their ice floe rapidly south to 79 degrees north latitude.

This meant a drift of a full degree, 60 miles since Saturday. Experts expressed fear the floe might be swept into the open sea, where it could be broken to pieces before the men are taken off.

China Girds Millions In Jap Fight

By JAMES A. MILLS
Associated Press Staff Writer
HANKOW, Jan. 6. — The man-power of this nation of 400,000,000 persons was being recruited today on a national mobilization basis for an unrelenting war against Japan.

All cities and towns under Japanese-occupied areas are armed with weapons. In some cities, recruits outnumbered civilians. By spring China expects to have 50 full divisions in the field.

China's resolve to fight Japan to the uttermost was exemplified Wednesday by the government's decision to strengthen the national council and by renewed activity of Madame Chiang Kai-Shek's reorganized army.

The government announced Chinese troops would be sent to Japan gunboats in the Yangtze river near Wuhu Jan. 3 and destroyed the air field and saw Japanese planes at Wuhu Wednesday.

In the reorganization move General Chiang Kai-Shek, who recently resigned the presidency of the executive Yuan—corresponding to the president—was to be replaced by his entire title to president of the war remains as head of the military council.

General Ho Ying-Chin, premier minister of war, will be chief of the general staff.

New Passenger And Mail Service Operating Soon

A new air-line, connecting Vancouver with Edmonton through the Cariboo country, and connecting with United Air Transport operations at Fort St. John, B.C., will be in operation in the immediate future, according to an announcement made here today by R. L. "Ginger" Coote, noted coast flier who has been the hero of a number of life saving and mercy flights through northern British Columbia.

The announcement followed conferences arranged here by J. G. Targum, M.P., who brought "Ginger" Coote and Grant Macdonald together and sat in on the meeting which brought about the new air line. Much of the territory flown over is in the area represented at Ottawa by Mr. Targum.

It is not certain that because of the mineral and other development taking place in the interior and northern British Columbia there will be in a short time sufficient mail, passenger and express business to make this service a success, said Mr. Targum.

Official announcement of the new air-line in the coast was made by "Ginger" Coote.

"I am pleased to be in position to announce that the new air-line has been made by the operation, by a company completely independent of the government, of an air service from Vancouver through the Cariboo country to Prince George and to connect with the Edmonton-Toronto service at Fort St. John in the Peace River country."

CHANGE URGED PAYMENT FOR CITY BROKERS

Share of Insurance Written in Exchange for Service Criticized
Objecting to the city's present policy of giving its insurance brokers a percentage of the insurance written by the city as payment for their services, a representative of an Edmonton insurance firm suggested to the city council that the city should pay a fixed fee for the service.

The suggestion was made during a discussion of the city's insurance contracts, particularly in connection with the brokers' contract held by the Farrell Associates, Limited. The question was brought in connection with a short time ago by this committee, which was brought in connection with a short time ago by this committee.

PREPARE REPORT
No decision was made by the committee of the proposed cancellation of the contract, and commissioners were instructed to prepare a report covering the various aspects of insurance now written by the city and the method in which it is administered.

Under the existing policy, the city's insurance brokers receive 25 per cent of the casualty insurance written for the city. In return for this, the brokers are to provide the city with a list of all the insurance companies which are licensed to do business in the city.

Pay For Overtime Work in Coal Mines Discussed

NEW CONTRACT IS SOUGHT BY MINER UNIONS

Some Alberta Locals Suggest Abolition Of Overtime

CALGARY, Jan. 6.—Problem of pay for overtime work in the coal mines of Alberta and British Columbia was discussed at a special convention of district 18, United Mine Workers of America, here Wednesday.

British Columbia miners' delegates offered resolutions urging union officials to seek an increase in overtime rates of pay. Under present contracts workers are paid straight time for overtime.

Some Alberta locals would like to see the abolition of overtime. This, it was argued, would create more work for unemployed miners.

No decision was reached at the convention today but pay for overtime was the subject of much discussion. It was intimated that one of the subjects pending before the state committee is the possibility of all contracts with operators being terminated March 11, when the new objective of the convention is to obtain agreement on uniform rates of pay and working conditions in all mines under district 18.

Contracts for the year 1938-39 will be studied and a committee appointed Wednesday will be empowered to make recommendations to the mine operators.

DATE OF MEETING

Present contracts set the date of the meetings with operators as 30 days before the expiration of agreements. A. Robert Livett, district president, "this would set the date somewhere around the end of February or the date of expiration is March 11." The meeting probably would be held in Calgary, one with steam heating and operators and with the lights of domestic coal mine owners.

43 UNION LOCALS

Forty-three locals of District 18, with 1,500 members, were represented here by 75 delegates.

The union represents workers in Alberta, Vancouver Island and southeastern British Columbia.

Delegates to the convention were welcomed by Fred J. White, president of the Alberta Federation of Labor.

He urged the need of "staring industrial organizations in the face of today's industrial reality."

GENERAL MOTORS SALES IN SLUMP

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—William S. Knudsen, president of General Motors Corporation, told a special United States Senate committee today that sales of the company's cars had dropped in history during November and December.

by the means employed in Abyssinia and China. Since the democracies are the countries at whose expense the aggrandizement must be made, the fact that they are unable to co-operate for their own security is a strong confirmation of the President's suggestion that they had better get on with the job.

Anything Mr. Roosevelt omitted to say as a reason why the peace-loving and treaty-keeping powers should be interested in the interests of their own safety is supplied by bombastic but no doubt candid warnings from Berlin, Rome and Tokyo.

THE RENEGADE—AND HIS FRIENDS

Police in both Edmonton and Calgary are hunting for hit-and-run drivers. An Edmonton man, slapping from a street car Monday evening, was struck and badly injured by a car which proceeded on its way. An unknown motorist can over and over again kill a man on a highway just outside Calgary on New Year's night. The police evidently found no clues to the identity of the driver, and they appealed to any who had knowledge of the occurrence to volunteer information.

The Albertan, discussing the latter case, comments as follows:

"What can be done with the coward who runs away to save himself though he knows that by slaying he might save a life?—U.S. might have done in this instance? Can anyone imagine anything more contemptible? But what, can be done? Since the hit-and-run driver is not a criminal, if they are taken at all, keep on going! And if they are taken, they are taken to the police station. To appeal to the chivalry of those who would remind us of the king, of whom Touchstone thought, who were by his honor. But he was not and so was that king not there."

The hit-and-run driver presents the most baffling problem of the police. To take a coward to deal. He is of necessity either a coward or a criminal, or both; else he would not flee from a man who might save a life. To take a coward, there is a small prospect that after thought and remorse will cause him to identify himself, though that has happened sometimes. He would not do so, however, if he were a coward, who could clear up the mystery.

But that can scarcely happen often, seldom or never. The "accident" occurs at a time of general jubilation. The wild driver usually has a friend or friends along. It is to such, rather than to the police, that the police must turn for information. If they hold alliance, the truth may never be known. Yet they may hold alliance with a man who is loyal to the man who took them for the joy-ride.

No person is under any obligation to help another defend the ends of justice. When that fact goes to be clearly understood by those who drive cars and by those who accept their hospitality, the hit-and-run driver will lose some of the immunity he now enjoys. He will be brought to face him, when a hit-and-run driver is finally caught, those who were with him were part of it. They are not going to the police and telling what they knew.

SCHOOL, BOY, TEACHER

A public school ought to be the most attractive place for a boy that is vigorously strong in body and courageously active in mind. Unfortunately this is not so. In many cases the desire of the pupil to go away and stay away from school ends in his becoming a confirmed truant, and later a criminal.

Why should a tastelessly constructed school building, with decent furniture, and a touch of aesthetic in its equipment, not appeal to its pupils, in such a way that they will be pleased to recollect in long after they go from it into the strain and stress of life struggle?—Guelph Mercury.

JUST COPYING RUSSIA

Whatever may be the merit or demerit of the Bouda line, however, it is an interesting fact that it cannot be looked upon as something that is altogether original or that flourishes exclusively in capitalist countries. Some four or five years ago a Russian laborer named Alex. Stakhanov, a coal miner, developed a similar scheme for the speeding up of mining and all other forms of production in the Soviet republic. It was based on a rearranging of labor whereby waste motion was eliminated, and by the way, it is also the claim made by its supporters for the Bouda system. Stakhanov's plan was to speed up the hit-and-run driver with the rank and file of labor, by whom it was taken as a device to speed up the work of the workers; but it appealed mightily to Josef Stalin and the Soviet government, and a campaign was launched to make it effective throughout the country, which has since been done. Under Stakhanov production has been enormously increased. Stakhanov himself was awarded the Order of Lenin and is today one of the popular heroes of Sovietism.—Toronto Telegram.

POST-WAR WHEAT

The expansion of Canadian acreage was accompanied in the four years 1924 to 1928 by very good yields per acre. The crop of 1927, nearly 480 million bushels, was the largest up to that time but it was exceeded by the huge harvest of 587 million bushels in 1928. The acreage of wheat began to pile up after 1927, despite heavy exports.

The large revenues from the sale of big crops at satisfactory prices resulted in a heavy investment in capital equipment of all sorts. More than 50,000 tractors were sold in the three prairie provinces during the five years 1924 to 1928, and the use of combine harvesters spread rapidly; by the end of 1929 there were some 7,000 combines in operation. Simultaneously, and obviously economic conditions in the West stimulated an increase of immigration and a heavy influx of capital, both from eastward Canada, and from overseas. Both prairie and western Canada were now on space. The government of Canada was in the prairie provinces from 1918 to 1928. The total for the five years amounted to less than $200 million. While investments in machinery, buildings, and other capital equipment undoubtedly added to the efficiency of the prairie provinces as a wheat-producing area, they increased the economic burden of debt and greater vulnerability to fluctuations of income.

It has become apparent, in the years since the depression began, that the post-war economic recovery was not based on firm foundations. When the flow of capital to Europe ceased in 1929 and 1930 it was replaced by a large extent the movement of international commodities had been dependent upon it. At the same time, the economic conditions of "economic nationalism" were taken in country after country, the freights, stresses and strains and irreconcilable ambitions bequeathed to the world came more and more clearly to the fore. Nowhere has this been more obvious than in the case of wheat, which has been the center of more national policy aimed at stimulating the economy, restricting consumption and trade than any other major commodity.—Bank of Nova Scotia.

WHAT TO DO WITH BOOKS

What to do with our books is a matter which has troubled many a good man. Richard Heber was a collector upon a grand scale, and once he had collected a book he was not likely to let it go. He expressed the opinion that "no gentleman can be without three copies of a book, one for himself, one for his library, and one for his friends."

Almost such another was Dr. Wilberforce Eames, a much-loved American scholar, the width of whose reading grew to be a legend far beyond the limits of his country. His house became so cluttered with books that it was impossible to move about, and "only by lying in a hammock stuck to the wall was Eames able to conduct his researches. One day he found that there was an almost luxurious way of solving a problem which has often proved difficult to solve. Any book which he wanted to use he would simply place it on the floor, for there, as seldom in the bookcase, there was no one to hinder him from reaching for it or by dint of a little judicious footwork (preferably with carpet-slippers) to get to it. For more volumes. So much a plain scholar, that it was troublesome as for the reading to him to know where to put himself. Dr. Eames surely hit on the ideal expedient when he decided that his books should occupy the same space as his hands, and—certainly a noble example of the mind rising above matter.

For less inspiring—or convenient—was the practice of a collector who died a few years since in Chelsea. He had a large house that for some time before his death the only space he could find to lie down to sleep at night was that laid aside for his foot.

The area in which he was to sleep was so small that it had indeed been the refuge of more than one book-lover. Some thirty years ago, a certain collector of books, who had accumulated a monumental work, accumulated so many books that his whole floor was covered with a mass of volumes, some of which were so old, that a bag of mouldering oranges would come to light.

There was a friendly soul, and kept firmly wedged among his books in front of the fireplace, two armchairs, one for himself and one for his wife, who might sleep in a chair.

Your Health

By DR. FRANK MCCOY

The dried fruit which is possibly used most frequently in the house is the raisin. The raisins were liberal with their stories about boarding-house prunes until many people were a little skeptical about believing this valuable fruit. However, it has been found that prunes are good health builders and as such they have been recommended by diet experts as highly that they have been swept back into popular favor again.

As people became accustomed to eating them, they also got the habit of using some of the other fruits for the sake of variety. Raisins, prunes, and apples are commonly used in the stewed form with the bread and meat and are also used in an economical dessert with the dinner menu. Dried figs and also dates are other favorites.

Dried apricots are particularly recommended as a good general food. They are rich in iron and are efficient within the body for the building of normal red blood cells, a certain amount of copper must also be provided. In many cases where iron and copper have been lacking, a nutritional anemia is the result and in such cases, the eating of apricots has been beneficial. Dried apricots are the richest in copper of all dried fruits and are also an excellent source of iron. Prunes and peaches also share this blood-building virtue.

I recommend the eating of dried fruits in the diet. Inasmuch as the sugar content is quite high they may be regarded as excellent natural energy foods. Some patients report a slight laxative effect from the use of apricots, especially when it seems desirable to increase the laxative property. I suggest the use of prunes, apricots, and peaches in the water in which the dried fruit is soaked overnight. In the morning, cook the fruit in the same water and eat it. I believe that those who require some sort of laxative will find this the least harmful form of treatment. Dried fruits should not be used any longer than necessary.

The dried fruits are alkaline-forming, due to the richness in the minerals produced an alkaline ash. The alkaline ash is particularly valuable from this standpoint. While prunes contain many of the alkaline minerals, they also contain a substance which has the effect of making the alkaline ash which will add to the acidity of the kidney elimination. For this reason, although you will find them in the same group, prunes should not be used generally unless an asterisk beside them, referring to an explanation of this fact as given in a footnote.

Dried fruits should be properly prepared in order to bring out the fullest flavor and to preserve the shape. Long, gentle cooking is usually best. Prunes should be cooked in the skins to break and will make the fruit mushy. "Tenderized" prunes and apricots are an exception to the above rule. These fruits have been especially prepared for a relatively short cooking period.

Dried fruits are more economical than they appear. Prunes, for instance, are so little used in the kitchen, and partly because they increase in quantity through absorbing water while being cooked and soaked. Another good point in favor of dried fruits is that they are good for some time.

I suggest that each home-maker serve dried fruits more often during the winter months, when fresh fruits are comparatively scarce. When you serve them you may be sure you are

Your Children - By OLIVE ROBERTS

Johnny was very happy with his soap-box sled. He thought the galloping that held up his worn corduroy pants the slinkiest possession a boy could have. Up above the Daily he became more unhappy. He was no longer important; he was no longer even a member. He stood alone. And so alone. He wanted to put on his old pants and the red suspenders with the

Curious World —By William Ferguson

No one knows why the motmot shaves the barbs from the two long tail feathers. It is bred in him to do so. A young motmot, reared entirely apart from his kind, adopts the habit upon maturity.

NEXT: When do male kangaroos stop growing?

Flapper Fanny —By Sylvia

"Please, Chuck, teach me so I can whistle for taxis."
"What for? By the time you can afford 'em, I'll take you anywhere you want to go in my car."
